Wild Parsnip: Beware of This Plant

Wild parsnip shown above is especially dangerous to humans because of the interaction of the sap with sunlight when it comes in contact with exposed skin. It can cause severe burning and inflict scars that can last for months. If it happens to get in your eyes it will cause temporary or permanent blindness. And it grows just about everywhere in our area.

During much of July, August and early September wild parsnip is one of the most visible yellow-flowered weeds in roadside ditches, public recreation areas, around sports fields, fence rows, and along railroad tracks. It will just as happily grow in your lawn if it is allowed to.

Best method for eradicating it is digging or hand pulling (with protective gloves and clothing, of course). If you mow it, do it while the flowers are budding, around mid June. Mowing after the seeds have formed only helps to spread this dangerous plant. Learn more at:
